Brief Course Description

This course will be taught through a series of interactive lectures and structured seminar exercises. Lectures are intended to be interactive, with participation by students in discussion on the relevant topic. Students are expected to come to the lectures having read at least the required reading for that week and be ready to engage in discussion on that week's topic. There are a small number of seminars, which generally take the form of structured exercises such as debates and role-plays. In order for these to work properly, students are asked to plan their work in advance and take adequate time to prepare when it is their turn to present.

Aims

This course aims to

1. Debates over the nature of globalisation and its consequences for social policy, social well-being and social divisions.
2. A range of global social policy issues, such as poverty and inequality, health, the social impacts of trade liberalisation and labour standards.
3. How these issues are debated and addressed by international organisations.
4. How these international organisations are - or are not - being reformed to deal more effectively with the issues.
5. The role of transnational social actors in the new global social policy agenda.
6. How the politics of globalisation manifest themselves in relation to social policy in a number of regional and national contexts.

Learning Outcomes (LOs)

Upon successful completion of the course, students will be able to:
