Brief Course Description

An examination of basic ideas that underlie the idea of law, including the classical Western notions of natural law and contractualism, as well as the inherent difficulties with these views. The course further explores other ideas of law, including the project of legal positivism. Following this grounding in the basic ideas of law, the course aims to present some recent developments in legal theory including those surrounding the problems raised by critical legal theory and Dworkin's contribution to law's interpretation.

Aims

This course seeks to provide students with an introduction to the main ideas that make up the body of legal philosophy.

Learning Outcomes

The course is designed to equip students be able to:

1. Demonstrate a familiarity with the literature and controversies surrounding the concept of law.
2. Be able to outline the traditional positions on legal theory including natural law, legal positivism and the Dworkinian response.
3. Demonstrate an understanding of some of the key social and political aspects of the law.

Indicative Content

Introductory issues in the philosophy of law; law as it is and as it ought to be
The classical Greek tradition through Christian naturalism
Machiavelli, Hobbes and the emergence of contractualism;
A doctrine of secular authority
Finding the law in legal positivism:
Jeremy Bentham, John Austin and Herbert Hart
Problems inherent to contemporary global conflict:
The Rule of Law and the possible responses to terror
Ronald Dworkin and the future of legal theory

Teaching Method

The course employs a seminar approach, including lectures as well as group discussion. Lectures are designed to introduce students to the techniques of argument analysis and assessment. Discussions are meant to allow students to reinforce general concepts within the context of both group discussion and practice.

Measurement of Learning Outcomes

Students' progress toward the intended learning outcomes will be assessed as follows:

1. Given that this is an elective course offered within the Department, it is to be taught in a seminar format. Therefore, class participation is regarded as being particularly important. Students are expected to actively participate in class discussion, in terms of bringing their own questions to the table and making their own arguments about the course material under discussion. Refers to Learning Outcomes 1-3.
2. Students will also be required to take a final examination where they should demonstrate an ability to identify specific theoretical issues and then apply these to specific issues in aid of their answers. Refers to Learning Outcomes 1-3
3. Students will write a research paper which will be on a selected topic within the discipline of legal philosophy to be approved by the instructor. Refers to Learning Outcomes 1 and 3.
4. In both class participation and in the written component, students will also demonstrate an ability to argue a position on a selected question topic and then move from their premises to a well-reasoned conclusion. Refers to Learning Outcomes 1-3.

Assessment

Research Paper: 30%

Class Participation: 25%

Final Examination: 45%
